How to Use This Journal

If you're like me, it can be hard to plan out your lessons, especially ones you write on your own. It's not easy to know how to structure the lesson in a way that connects with your students and moves them to action. To help make this easier, this notebook is designed to help you write notes on your lesson to help you write your final draft. The structure for these notes is based on the concept of the Hook, Book, Look, and Took method of teaching. If you are unfamiliar with this method, I encourage you to check out this lesson by Dr. Rick Chromey on YouTube. Take note that his timeframe estimates are wide and may need to be adjusted by the length of your lesson:

Once you understand this method, the note-taking template in this notebook is pretty straightforward. I encourage you to start with writing down the Scripture(s) you are studying and allow it to be your guide as you compose your lesson. I hope that this notebook will help you as you serve your students.

Note for Sample Version – First of all, please note that the final product is a little over 100 pages, containing the next two pages of this sample 50 times, which should be more than enough to cover about a year of weekly lessons. Second, if you believe this to be a quality resource you would recommend to other youth ministries, please consider leaving a review on Amazon and telling others about it. It would go a long way in getting this resource into the hands of those that need it and supporting the work of creating youth ministry resources like this one. Thanks
